On the first day of the visit, the delegation participated in a conference organized by the Polish Embassy in London and the Institute of National Remembrance entitled "Edward Bernard Raczyński (1891-1993): diplomat, politician, writer and statesman" in tribute to the President of Poland in exile on the 25th anniversary of his death.

In his speech during the conference, the President of the IPN, Dr Jarosław Szarek said that "immigration and independence are two inseparable words". President Szarek also emphasized the importance of the heritage of the Polish emigration.

Dr hab. Arkady Rzegocki, Ambassador of the Republic of Poland to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, mentioned in his speech that it is difficult to find a second figure that is more connected with 'Polish London' than Edward Raczyński.

Born in Zakopane in 1891, Edward Raczyński was the second child of Edward Aleksander Raczyński and Róża Raczyńska. He came from the well-known Greater Poland family of Raczyński of the Nałęcz coat of arms. He was the brother of Roger Raczyński - the voivode of Poznań, the Ambassador of the Republic of Poland in Bucharest in 1938-1940. He attended the King Jan III Sobieski Junior High School in Krakow, then studied at universities in Lipsk, Krakow and London. He was a long-standing diplomat working for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Poland in 1919-1945. During his service for the country, he was the Permanent Delegate of the Republic of Poland to the League of Nations in Geneva (1932-1934) and the Ambassador of the Republic of Poland at the Court of St. James in London (1934-1945). His greatest achievements include: the preparation of the procedure of withdrawal from the small Versailles Treaty (1934), the signing of the Polish-British Mutual Assistance agreement (1939) and sending a note to the United Nations government regarding German crimes against the Jewish population in German occupied Poland (1942). After the United Kingdom withdrew its recognition for the Polish government, Edward Raczyński remained in London and was active in the political life of the Polish community, among others, as a member of the Council of Three (1954-1972), and later as the President of the Republic of Poland in Exile (1979-1986). In 1990, he established the Raczyński Foundation in Poznań, and donated the palace and park in Rogalin, Galeria Rogalinska. He died on 30 July 1993 in London, he was buried in Rogalin.

His political and diplomatic activities ought to serve as an example to others, and the motto engraved on his sarcophagus "...DO NOT WASTE YOUR INDEPENDENCE! [NIE ZMARNUJCIE NIEPODLEGŁOŚCI!]", should be remembered by successive generations.

IPN's delegation visiting Zbigniew Siemaszko

During their stay in London, the IPN's delegation paid a very important visit to Zbigniew Siemaszko - a Polish historian, writer and journalist in exile. In the circles of 'Polish London' he became known as an active publicist, polemicist, and participant of loud discussions. His interests include military history, World War II, communication between war emigration and the country, the Home Army and the National Armed Forces.

The meeting began with gifts and birthday wishes for Mr. Siemaszko, including the IPN's publication -White Legions - about Polish formations in Russia.

"An enduring soldier from London, one of the last who fought for independent Poland with a saber and a pen. Ad multos annos!," said Jarosław Szarek to Zbigniew Siemaszko.
